FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

InTERRAgation.com Launches Project to Discover "Meaning of Life"
One year, one planet, one question

October 1, 2009
Los Angeles, California

The world may be one step closer to uncovering the meaning of life with the launch of a project to collect responses from across the globe. InTERRAgation.com will follow Katherine and Vincent, two twenty-four year olds, as they prepare for and ultimately embark on a worldwide trek to ask the same question as many times as they can; What is the meaning of life?

The first stage of the project is simple. Katherine and Vincent will be collecting as many definitions of the meaning of life as they can via email. The best and most interesting will be featured on the site for discussion.

During this time they will be collecting donations and seeking sponsors for the second part of their project, which is a year-long trek to record as many responses from as many different people as they can. The best and most interesting footage will be featured on inTERRAgation.com and later in a documentary about the journey itself.

Sponsors can buy ad-space on the t-shirts that Katherine and Vincent will wear throughout their journey. Donations will help expand the scope of the project. Information about sponsorship and donations is available at www.inTERRAgation.com.
